THE BROOKLYN BANK WILL MOVE AGAIN
This Time to Killings in the Town of Killingly.

(Special to The Bulletin.)
Hartford, March 18.—The persistent effort of the officials of the Brooklyn bank have finally been crowned with success, for on Thursday afternoon the house concurred with the senate in the passage of a measure giving authorities for the removal of the institution, the pride of Brooklyn, from that town to Killings. The matter came before the legislature in this simple and to an extent mysterious form and was tucked away on the house calendar in a position removed from other matters started for action.

The charter of the Brooklyn Savings bank, approved June 11, 1872, is hereby amended by striking out the word "Brooklyn" in both section one, line eleven, and section six, line two and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Killings".

Simply a change of a word, but which carried with it triumph for the bank officials against the sentiment of the people of Brooklyn.

The amendment came from the senate passed and when it was reached on the house calendar, the last matter of action, Representative Hall, of Willington, house chairman of the committee on banks, turned on the spotlight, and the members who served in the session of 1913 recognized the same measure that was like reported to that session, but which was defeated through the efforts of Representative Bessette, who made his only speech of the session and against the removal of the bank. His personal appeal and earnestness won the sympathy of his fellow members and they voted with him.

Mr. Hall explained that the bill had been formally considered by the committee on banks, in response to a petition from all officers of the bank to so amend the charter that would permit the removal of the bank to the town of Killings. This same petition, in substance, had been before at least three consecutive sessions of the legislature and defeated in deference to the people of Brooklyn. Two years ago, said Mr. Hall, the legislators were told that the business of the bank would not decrease if it remained in Brooklyn and that no increase would come with its removal to Danielson.

Exercising the right to locate the bank anywhere in the town of Brooklyn, the officers caused the bank since then to be moved from Brooklyn center to the town of Killings. The bank, which in part divides the town of Brooklyn and Killings, and just across the bridge from Danielson. Since the changed conditions in Brooklyn center, the receipts of the bank had fallen off $18,000, but since in its present location there has been an increase of $78,000, quite an argument in favor of the change.

Continuing, Mr. Hall said that every officer of the bank, including Treasurer Potter, who had been in the position for over forty years, were in favor of the amendment. Brooklyn used to be a thriving business center, but now all industries had departed, nothing remained but the bank. The situation became one of sentiment against business, and the bank officers wanted to get to the center of business in Danielson, the most of business coming from that place and Plainfield, while only three per cent of the bank's business comes from Brooklyn. Mr. Hall said that only two men appeared on opposition at the hearing, and one of these had withdrawn his name from the contest.

Mr. Hall added that the other was not a depositor in the bank. The bank was at present located in an inadequate building near the Quinebaug river and wants to move to Danielson, where it can be properly housed and protected from all fire hazards.

Mr. Hall said that the act of amendment should not be passed and the petition of the bank officials granted. It was the desire to build up the business of this sound financial institution and wanted to get away from an isolated position and go where there is business in the thriving business center of Danielson.

Representative Atwood of Brooklyn opposed the measure declaring that the proposed removal was not for the purpose of increasing business, but for a more convenient location.

Mr. Hall said that the bank had been in the town of Danielson for nearly two years ago the bank was moved to the town of Killings and convenient to Danielson and can do the banking business for that place without leaving the town of Brooklyn, especially as there are now two trust companies, a savings bank and a national bank in Danielson, in the town of Killings.

Mr. Atwood said the whole town of Brooklyn was opposed to the removal of the bank from the limits of the town and he did not believe the depositors favored the proposed change in location. All the officers of the bank are in favor of the reason that those who were opposed have been kicked out of office. The present location is convenient to steam and trolley roads and the change is proposed for the accommodation of the agent of the Quinebaug Manufacturing company, an officer of the bank. Mr. Hall had referred to the two men who appeared in opposition at the hearing. As a matter of fact one of these was a former officer of the bank. The other, Mr. Atwood said, was himself. While he was not a personal depositor, considerable funds entrusted to him as a town official, were deposited in the bank. In conclusion Mr. Atwood said that for a county bank the Brooklyn Savings bank was a strong institution, with deposits of $1,700,000 and a surplus of $78,000, and that the people of Brooklyn were opposed to the removal of the bank from the town.

The amendment was then put upon passage and was carried with but two dissenting votes.

Representative Back, of Killings, just as a clincher, moved reconsideration of the action just taken, and hoped the motion to reconsider would not prevail. Mr. Back's motion was lost, which means that the matter cannot be recalled.

Cottolene—Unequaled for purity and wholesomeness

The shortening you use in cooking and baking should be as pure and wholesome as the food that is prepared with it.

Cottolene is itself a pure, wholesome food, consisting of ultra-refined cottonseed oil—as fine as the choicest salad oil—and beef stearine from selected leaf beef suet.

The purity of Cottolene is indicated by its rich creamy tint. It is unbleached, contains no salt or water, and possesses high food values.

Cottolene

for more than a quarter of a century has been giving complete satisfaction in thousands of homes.

Cottolene is not "just as good" as other cooking and frying fats—it is better than any other—more nutritious, more wholesome, more digestible—better in every way.

The purity of Cottolene is safeguarded not only in the refining processes, but in the careful selection of the choicest cottonseed oil and beef suet. Nothing else is used in the production of Cottolene, the supreme cooking fat.

Cottolene does not absorb tastes or odors. Heat it slowly and use it over and over for all kinds of frying.

Always use a third less of Cottolene than of any other shortening or frying fat. Cottolene goes farthest and gives the most gratifying results.
